The Supplier Recognition Program recognizes suppliers that continuously provide outstanding support to Northrop Grumman and its Information Systems sector. Information Systems had more than 3,000 suppliers eligible for the award this year. All were evaluated based on five categories: schedule, management, technical, financial and quality.

In recognizing the recipients, Kathy Warden, corporate vice president and president of Northrop Grumman Information Systems, said, "Northrop Grumman is truly grateful for the significant contributions that each of these suppliers has made to ensure the success of our programs and our customers' missions."

"This is a highly competitive award and we are pleased to honor each of the recipients for their exceptional contributions to our supply chain," said Cynthia Hyland, sector vice president, Global Supply Chain. "Congratulations to all of our 2014 Supplier Excellence Award winners."

Awards were presented in four categories: development, production, services and socio-economic. Of the suppliers recognized, more than 70 percent were small and socio-economic business partners.
